Halle, Howard. "Check out these top group exhibitions at art galleries this summer," TimeOut.com (June 14, 2018).

Paul Chan, Dimposium, 2016

Every year as summer approaches, art galleries in Chelsea, the Lower East Side and elsewhere change up their exhibition programs by shifting from solo shows to group exhibits curated around themes. This year is no different as galleries turn over their spaces to curators mounting multi-artist round-ups that not only give you a chance to see more artists at one time, but also offer provocative food for thought. Here is a even dozen group shows you don't want to miss.

"Evidence"

Though its title seems to affirm empiricism and a reliance on facts, this show is actually about the opposite: Works by seven artists contemplate Trump's "post-truth" America and the ways in which social inequality is facilitated by the media's distorting effect on reality and political norms. Metro Pictures, through July 27.
